Are 'Shopping Centres' really new?

Remember the general store? In many ways it was a shopping centre. It earried an amazing variety of goods—groceries, dry goods, hardware—praetically everything under the smn. But, our tastes and shopping labits have changed since folks shopping centre, with its variety of slops and stores, bears little resemblance to the one in the illustration.

The automobile and the rubber that it moves upon have played an important part in the evolution of our present shopping habits. Today's shopping centres depend for their very existence on the countless fleets of trucks that deliver the goods and the millions of ears that earry the shoppers—and these, in turn, owe much of their efficiency to the superiority of synthetic rubber.

For practically every type of product in which rubber is used . . . synthetic rubber is better—that's why half of all new rubber
